Excerpt

Ava stared at Ethan across the crowded casino floor. Her heart pounded in her chest, a mixture of trepidation and anticipation. He was even more handsome than she remembered, with piercing blue eyes that seemed to see right through her.

"Ava," he said, his voice a low growl that sent shivers down her spine. "It's been a long time."

She forced herself to meet his gaze. "Too long," she replied, her voice betraying the tension between them.

Ethan took a step towards her, his eyes burning into hers. "I've been thinking about you," he said. "Every day."

Ava's breath caught in her throat. She had never expected him to say such a thing. "Why?" she asked, her voice barely above a whisper.

"Because," Ethan said, his voice husky with desire, "I can't resist you, Ava. You're everything I've ever wanted and everything I never knew I needed."

Their gazes locked, and the air crackled with electricity. In that moment, Ava knew that she was falling for Ethan, hard and fast. But she also knew that their love was forbidden and dangerous.
