

Making It Okay For Our Kids To Be Proud To Be American

In a time when it seems like patriotism is under attack, it's more important than ever to teach our kids to be proud to be American.

It's no secret that patriotism has taken a hit in recent years. A 2018 poll found that only 38% of Americans are proud to be American, down from 70% in 2003. This decline is particularly concerning among young people. A 2017 survey found that only 25% of millennials say they are proud to be American.

There are a number of factors that have contributed to this decline in patriotism. One factor is the rise of social media. Social media has given a platform to a small but vocal minority of people who are critical of America. These critics often paint a negative picture of our country, and their views can be easily spread to young people who are still forming their opinions about the world.

Another factor that has contributed to the decline in patriotism is the increasing polarization of American society. In recent years, the two major political parties have become more and more divided. This division has led to a climate of intolerance and incivility, which has made it difficult for people to feel good about their country.

Despite these challenges, it's more important than ever to teach our kids to be proud to be American. Patriotism is essential for a strong and healthy society. It helps to unite us as a people and gives us a sense of purpose. It also inspires us to work together to make our country a better place.

There are a number of things that we can do to help our kids develop a sense of patriotism. One important thing is to teach them about the history of our country. They need to learn about the sacrifices that our ancestors made to build this nation. They also need to learn about the values that our country was founded on, such as freedom, equality, and opportunity.

Another important thing that we can do is to encourage our kids to participate in patriotic activities. This could include attending parades, flying the American flag, or singing the national anthem. These activities can help to instill in our kids a sense of pride in their country.

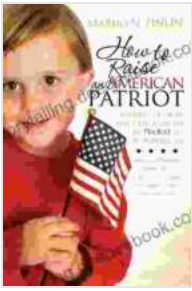

Finally, we need to model patriotism for our kids. They need to see us being proud to be American. They need to see us standing up for our beliefs and working to make our country a better place.

Teaching our kids to be proud to be American is not always easy. But it's essential for the future of our country. By instilling in our kids a sense of patriotism, we can help them to become responsible citizens who are committed to making our country a better place.

Here are some tips for teaching your kids to be proud to be American:

- Teach them about the history of our country. They need to learn about the sacrifices that our ancestors made to build this nation. They also need to learn about the values that our country was founded on, such as freedom, equality, and opportunity.
- Encourage them to participate in patriotic activities. This could include attending parades, flying the American flag, or singing the national anthem. These activities can help to instill in our kids a sense of pride in their country.
- Model patriotism for your kids. They need to see you being proud to be American. They need to see you standing up for your beliefs and working to make our country a better place.
- Talk to your kids about the importance of patriotism. Explain to them why it's important to be proud of their country. Help them to understand the benefits of patriotism, such as a sense of unity, purpose, and inspiration.
- Be patient. It takes time to develop a sense of patriotism. Don't get discouraged if your kids don't seem to be interested in patriotism at first. Just keep exposing them to patriotic ideas and activities, and eventually they will come to appreciate the importance of being an American.

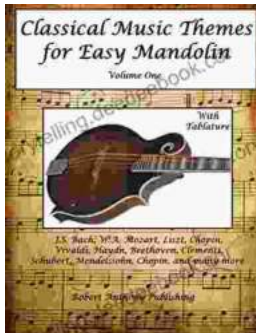

By following these tips, you can help your kids to develop a strong sense of patriotism. This will help them to become responsible citizens who are committed to making our country a better place.
