

Teaching Language Arts in a Student-Centered Classroom

Language arts is a subject that encompasses reading, writing, speaking, and listening. In a traditional language arts classroom, the teacher typically lectures on these topics and assigns students worksheets and textbooks to complete. However, there is a growing movement of educators who believe that a more effective way to teach language arts is to adopt a student-centered approach.

What is a student-centered classroom?

A student-centered classroom is one in which the teacher takes a back seat and allows students to drive their own learning. This means that students are given more choice and autonomy in how they learn. They may be given opportunities to choose the topics they want to study, the projects they want to work on, and the ways they want to demonstrate their learning.
